

March 20, 2020

To our cyclists, loyal supporters, and followers:

We have been watching events unfold in the wake of Coronavirus, while weighing the options for this year's Death Ride. Do we reschedule for later in hopes things are cleared up? Do we cancel?

How about Option C? In a world that has been turned upside down for many, we have chosen to stay the course. We will continue to prepare for the event on July 11, and we hope you will keep us on your calendar. We feel strongly that the cycling spirit is one that learns to withstand peaks and valleys, inclement weather, fatigue, walls, detours and wrong turns. And we believe that during a time when there is so little to count on, we can count on ourselves to get out and ride.

So, if you have already registered, please continue to train for July 11. If you have not, put July 11 on your calendar and start riding. And whether you train for five, four, or two passes, you will have accomplished much by the time you reach the starting line. Most know this event as the Death Ride, but now more than ever this ride is more about LIFE. Therefore, we will continue to stay the course and plan for our Resurgence Tour.

Finally, we are continuing to follow the guidelines that are laid out for us from our local, state, and national leaders. As events unfold, we will be better equipped to communicate contingency plans. Until then, you can expect to find our sites promoting all that is healthy, inspirational, and cycling-oriented, along with ongoing event updates.

Cycle safely and stay well,

Your Resurgence Tour Management Team
